

ELOPERS WED HERE

Miss Du Pont and John Bancroft Are United.

DR. MACLEOD THE MINISTER

Well-known Wilmington Young People, Friends Since Childhood, Seek Aid of Frederick Fenning, Who Obtains License and Is Witness at Ceremony at Church.

John Bancroft, Jr., and Miss Madeline Du Pont, both of Wilmington, Del., eloped to this city Wednesday and were married by the Rev. Dr. MacLeod, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, John Marshall place, between C and D streets northwest.

The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Bancroft, sr., and the bride a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred I. Du Pont, both prominent families of Wilmington.

Acquainted Since Childhood.

The young couple, who had known each other since childhood, arrived in the city Wednesday morning, and through the efforts of Frederick Fenning, a well-known attorney of this city, arrangements for the ceremony were completed.

When interviewed by a Herald reporter last night, Mr. Fenning said that he had helped the young couple at the request of a friend, who was also closely acquainted with the bridegroom.

"I obtained the marriage license for them," he said, "and witnessed the ceremony, which took place in the office of Dr. MacLeod, at the First Presbyterian Church. My services were not extended to them on account of any legal questions, but simply because the members of the party were ignorant of the formalities necessary to a marriage in Washington."

Ceremony in Church.

Dr. MacLeod, when seen early this morning, verified the statement made by Mr. Fenning. He said that at the request of Mr. Fenning he performed the ceremony at his office in the church, at 1 o'clock Wednesday afternoon.

"I was not acquainted with the couple," he said, "and know nothing further than that they desired my services as a minister."

The bridegroom is a Princeton student, but will not complete his studies in that university. It was stated that he will shortly leave with his bride for Germany, where he will enter one of the German universities.

Alfred I. Du Pont, father of the bride, is the president of the Du Pont Powder Company.

The bridegroom is twenty-two years of age and the bride nineteen.

"HARD" DRINKS ARE TABOOED.

Business High School Alumni Serve Coffee at Smoker.

It was decided by a unanimous vote last night at the initial smoker of the Business High School Alumni Association, at Lewis' Hall, 1502 Fourteenth street northwest, that all smokers given by the association shall admit of no spirituous beverages. Coffee and soft drinks were served last night.

Among the many good numbers on the programme were recitations by Edward Lehy and Fred O'Connell; humorous anecdotes by C. Alan Davis, principal, and Dr. A. L. Howard, of the faculty of the Business High School; dialect stories by Guy Collins and John J. Gorman; instrumental solos by Stewart Beers and Uriel Davis, and songs by Philip Lee Scantling. The Nordica Mandolin Club rendered selections.

The committee of entertainment and arrangements was composed of Messrs. Harry F. Lowe, chairman; Howard F. Entriens, secretary; E. P. Corbett, Chas. S. Zurborst, Frank G. Whitney, Howard M. Pruden, Leonard F. Ruoff, Clarence C. Weidemann, W. J. L. Siss, and B. H. Gibbs.

The association will give a unique "skate dance" at Convention Hall January 17, when more than 1,000 graduates of the Business High School are expected to be present.

OVERCOATS FOR POOR.

Saks & Co. Will Make Christmas Gifts to 100 Men.

Following the usual custom of former years, Saks & Co., Pennsylvania avenue and Seventh street, will give to the poor on Christmas morning 100 overcoats. This is a charitable work that was instituted by the firm several years ago, and is appreciated both by the beneficiaries and the public.

Every Christmas morning, long before the appointed hour, it is a customary sight to see a number of youths, averaging from the age of ten years upward to manhood, lined up before the entrance of the Saks store, waiting to receive the overcoats, for which their names have been sent in some time before.

NOTED SOUTHERN WOMEN DIES

Mrs. Marr a Famous Washington Belle in Civil War Days.

Mrs. Kate Thysen Marr, daughter of an old Washington family, died suddenly in New York yesterday, where she had resided for a number of years.

She was the daughter of Paulus and Parthenia Thysen, prominent anti-slavery residents of the National Capital, and was a reigning belle a half century ago.

About the close of the civil war she was married to Gen. Barry, of the staff of Gen. Sherman. After his death she again married, becoming the wife of Alonzo Marr, who resided here, and was prominent in real estate circles twenty-five years ago. The funeral arrangements have not yet been made.

Mrs. Marr was the author of several novels, and was an accomplished musician.

Underground Canada.

Some wonderful underground caves and waterways have been discovered in the Selkirk mountains of Canada. It is three years since their existence first became known, but they were only partially explored. Between 5,000 and 6,000 feet have been mapped. Conflicting theories exist as to the origin of the caves. One theory attributes them to earthquake; another to erosion during a period of 40,000 years.

Senator Warren Leaves for Home.

Senator Francis E. Warren, of Wyoming, left Washington yesterday for his home in Cheyenne, Wyo., where he will remain until the close of the holiday recess of Congress. Upon his return Senator Warren will again take up his residence at the New Willard, where he has lived for the past three or four years.

VISITS COLUMBIA LODGE.

Grand Master, Odd Fellows of District Jurisdiction, O. D. Vermilion.

ODD FELLOWS PAY VISIT.

Gala Time When Grand Officers Call on Columbia Lodge.

A. E. Vermilion, grand master of the Odd Fellows of the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia, accompanied by the officers of the Grand Lodge, made a visit last night to Columbia Lodge, No. 10, I. O. O. F., at their hall in Seventh street.

Columbia Lodge is one of the wealthiest lodges in the world, and has attained the highest perfection in exemplification of the degrees which are conferred on all candidates for entrance into Odd Fellowship.

The lodge is the home lodge of the grand officers, and is the last on the list of visits for the current year, twenty-seven lodges having been visited during the year, and examined as to their proficiency in the work of the order.

The occasion called forth between three and four hundred members of the order, and the evening was spent in the review of work, speeches being made by the several grand officers. The principal address of the evening was made by Grand Warden Dugan.

A banquet took place in the large auditorium, which was decorated with ferns, holly, and evergreen. The grand master was presented with a handsome clock set, consisting of a French gilt clock and two candelabra. Past Grand Master Grumley was master of ceremonies. An orchestra furnished music during the evening.

The banquet closed with a pleasing programme. Those who entertained were Mr. William L. Thornton, in illustrated songs; a quartet, illustrated talk, burlesquing the members of the lodge in a baseball game, by Past Grand Master Turnbull, and an exhibition drill by Canton Washington.

The committee having the affair in charge consisted of Mr. E. C. Grumley, chairman, and Past Grand Masters Pollock, Redfield, and Taylor.

CHANCELLOR CASE TO GO ON

Illness or Absence of the Accused Not to Delay Trial.

Capt. Oyster Deplores Superintendent's Illness, but Says People Want Settlement.

Present arrangements call for a continuance of the trial of Dr. Chancellor, superintendent of the public schools, by order of the board of education this afternoon at 2 o'clock. The trial will go on without the presence of the accused superintendent, who, according to his physicians, is still in a condition too weak to be able to successfully undergo the excitement attendant upon his going on the stand.

It is understood that all the witnesses on Chancellor's side have not been heard yet, but that, notwithstanding this fact, it is the intention of Attorney McNamara, of the board, to offer testimony in rebuttal of that offered by the defense, at this afternoon's session.

Capt. Oyster, president of the board, deplores the fact that the whole matter cannot be settled at once; he said the people were getting tired of it and want to see the end of it, either one way or the other.

"We have always kept within the law," said Capt. Oyster yesterday, "and the only trouble and difficulty is between the board and Dr. Chancellor. The schools are going on just the same; their administration is properly looked after, and there is nothing wrong anywhere with the exception that the board has lost confidence in Dr. Chancellor. Nine-tenths of the teachers are in favor of the stand taken by the board, and there will be sufficient witnesses to prove my assertion. We are in daily receipt of letters from teachers and prominent citizens in which they endorse our action."

"Everything we do in this matter is done by advice of our attorney; we are merely proceeding as provided by the law. It looks bad on the surface to try a sick man, but there seems to be no alternative for us. Every sick person has my sympathy, and Dr. Chancellor, also, has mine, but facts are not changed by the state of health of a person. I would much prefer this trial was out of the hands of the board which it has been said, is the jury and the judge, all in one. We are trying our best, and if we are mistaken in the premises we are willing to make proper amends. But the board is a unit in the conviction that it has lost confidence in Dr. Chancellor."

"There are many people who are under the impression that the board of education is a salaried body. This is not the case, however. There is a salary only pay attached to the position, which is looked upon as one of high honor by every member. They willingly sacrifice their efforts and time in behalf of the schools, and particularly now the item of time is more than it would be if school matters were in a state of order."

TELLS OF OLD DAYS

Justice Barnard Addresses Bar Association

RECALLS CAREER OF WYLIE

Vigorous Style of Speech of Chief Justice Carter Described, and Many Amusing Anecdotes of Him Related to Washington Lawyers in University Hall Last Night.

An interesting and instructive address was delivered last night by Mr. Justice Barnard, associate justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, on "The Early Days of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia," in University Hall, George Washington University. The lecture was given by Justice Barnard at the request of the Bar Association of the District, and is the first of a series of addresses to be delivered this winter under the auspices of that association. The large hall was taxed to its capacity with members of the local bar and their friends, who continuously applauded the speaker.

On the platform were Mr. Justice Stafford, Mr. Justice Gould, and Mr. Justice Anderson, associate justices of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia; Mr. Justice Van Orsdel, of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia; William F. Mattingly, president of the District Bar Association, and Walter C. Clephane.

The speaker was introduced by Mr. Clephane.

Justice Barnard said in part: "Gentlemen of the Bar: It is my purpose to-night to speak of the early days of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and of the men who first constituted the same."

"The year 1802 found this District in a greatly disturbed condition, in consequence of the civil war that was then shaking the foundations of all our institutions. The rebellion had not yet reached its high-water mark."

"This condition of the court, as well as the system then in vogue, became the subject of inquiry in Congress, and an act was prepared to reorganize the courts of this District, and after earnest debate the same became a law, on March 3, 1802."

"Under this statute, Mr. Lincoln, on March 11, 1802, sent to the Senate, then holding an extra session, the names of four men selected by him to constitute the new bench, all of whom were well known to the country to be strong, conservative, and loyal to the administration."

"Three of these men had been members of Congress, and one was a local man. 'David K. Carter, of Ohio, was named to be chief justice, and Abraham B. Olin, of New York, George P. Fisher, of Delaware, and Andrew Wylie, of the District of Columbia, associate justices, the statute using these titles to designate the judges, instead of the titles of chief justice and associate justice, which were used in the act creating the old Circuit Court."

"Justice Wylie resided in Alexandria, Va., at the time of the election of President Lincoln, and had been known to be an avowed Republican, and he was the only man in the city of Alexandria who voted for Mr. Lincoln. His open avowal of his political principles had subjected him to threats that he would be shot if he voted for Mr. Lincoln, and after the election he was fired upon by some one while sitting on his porch, the bullet striking and breaking a glass which he held in his hand, and shortly after that he removed from Alexandria to Washington."

"Justice Wylie issued a writ of habeas corpus for Mrs. Surratt, but the return was made that the writ was suspended by order of the President, Andrew Johnson, and Mrs. Surratt was executed without an inquiry into her case, she having been convicted by a military court."

Chief Justice Carter. "In 1886, at the opening of the January term of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, holding a general term, there were present Justices MacArthur, Hagner, Cox, James, and Merrick, and the bench, when the picture of Chief Justice Carter, painted by Mr. Charles Armer, hung hanging in Equity Court Room No. 1, was presented to the court by Mr. Reginald F. Entriens, of the bar. In accepting this picture for the court, Mr. Justice MacArthur said that it was a very satisfactory likeness, the features in the relief, the expression excellent, perhaps a little severe, as if the Chief Justice was in the act of smashing a frivolous motion. He also said: 'The Chief Justice had sat there nearly a quarter of a century, and they all know the extraordinary ability he has shown—perhaps unparalleled—and, that, even in the future they should look upon this picture, and be reminded of his strong utterances.'"

"His vigorous style of speech was evidently acquired before he came upon the bench. In Ben. Perley Poore's Reminiscences, Vol. 1, page 230, the author speaks of Chief Justice Carter, then a member of Congress, and says that in criticizing Daniel Webster's action as Secretary of State in negotiating the purchase of the Corcoran & Riggs, and Howard & Aspinwall, drafts in payment of Mexican indemnity money for 2 1/2 per cent premium, instead of accepting August Belmont's offer to negotiate their sale for 4 per cent premium, Justice Carter used this language: 'I want the House to understand that I take no part with the house of Rothschild, or of Barings, or of Corcoran & Riggs, or of Walcham, or of any of the money precisely as I would upon the contest of a set of blacklegs around a gaming table over the last stake. They have all of them grown so large in gormandizing upon money that they have left the work of feeding individuals and taken to the enterprise of feeding nations.'"

"His original manner of speech is illustrated by many anecdotes that are still told of him among the older members of the bar."

"Here is one which appeared in the Editor's Drawer, in Harper's Magazine, for September, 1873: 'At a late term of the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia, Chief Justice Carter presiding, the dignity of the proceedings was quite upset by the following incident: 'A suit was pending in which the plaintiff claimed full contract price for work partially performed, but not finished on account of fraud on the part of the defendant. The defense was that the plaintiff was not entitled to more than quantum meruit, because the defendant enjoyed no benefit from the work. The chief justice, who is troubled with a slight impediment of speech, speedily settled the point by stating: 'If a man-an hired another man-an to r-r-r-r him with a b-r-r-rick, he's got to pay for it wh-whether he en-j-r-joys it or not.'"

"Another story is this: An attorney in the trial of a case before him was insisting with great earnestness that there had been an unbroken line of decisions in accordance with his contention for more than a hundred years. The authorities seemed to the chief justice to be based upon narrow or technical grounds, and not in accordance with his ideas of what was right and just under the facts developed in the case. He stopped the attorney and said to him, 'You say that there has not been a decision of any of the courts contrary to your contention for one hundred years?'"

"The attorney assured him that such was the fact."

"Then the chief justice said, 'Don't you think it is about time there was one?' and then added, 'there is going to be one in about five minutes.'"

"The attorney was so taken back by the intimation from the bench that he suspended his argument, and the line of decisions was at once broken by the ruling of the chief justice."

Those Who Remain.

"Of all the officers connected with the court when it was first organized none remain except Mr. Return J. Meigs, Jr., who was with his father as assistant clerk from the beginning, and is still in the office. Of the members of the bar then, only three remain in practice at this time—William F. Mattingly, who is now president of the Bar Association; Nathaniel Wilson, and Eugene Carus."

"During these twenty-four years the court witnessed three bloodless revolutions in the government of this District, and the futile efforts of Logan V. Beavis to have the Capital removed to St. Louis. It saw the last mayor and common council, and witnessed the abolition of the city governments of Washington and Georgetown, and of the Levy Court; it saw the experiment of voting for a Delegate in Congress, and Senators of the District legislature, and the administration of two governors, and it saw the beginning of the government by commissioners. It heard the city groan under the weight of its own inertia, and then saw it spring forward toward its present beauty and wealth and comfort."

ANNIVERSARY OF PILGRIMS.

Descendants of Plymouth Settlers Will Celebrate To-morrow.

The anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers at Plymouth, December 21, 1620, will be celebrated to-morrow in every State where there are to be found natives of New England and descendants of the pioneers.

Setting sail in the Mayflower from Plymouth, England, on September 15, 1620, the Pilgrim Fathers and their families were tossed about on the ocean until November 12, when the Mayflower first anchored in Cape Cod Bay, just within the cape, in what is now the harbor of Provincetown, the only windward port in many a league where the vessel could have safely lain.

Men went ashore to explore the country for a permanent place of settlement, and finally selected the point now known as Plymouth. On December 21, exactly one month after the Mayflower had first dropped anchor, the first landing was made, and, according to tradition, two young persons, Mary Chilton and John Alden, were the first to spring upon Plymouth Rock from the boat which had brought them ashore.

Many of the women and children remained on the Mayflower while cabins were being built for them, and suffered greatly from unwholesome food and close confinement. Diseases appeared among them, and when, late in March, the last passengers landed from the Mayflower, nearly one-half the colonists were dead.

To-day five years ago the first wireless message was sent across the Atlantic.
